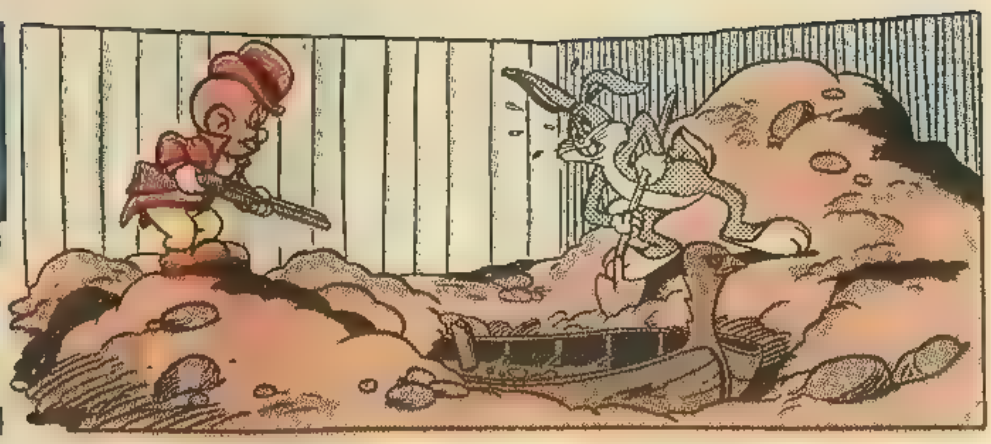
HIGH TIDE



"Hm-m-m," muttered Bugs Bunny, reporter for the Daily Blast, as he peered at a big sign in front of Elmer Fudd's seaside vacation house. "I wonder what my old pal is up to. There's a fence all around the back yard and this sign: 'GO AWAY! NO WEPORTERS WANTED — ESPECIALLY WABBITS!' "

Bugs pondered for a moment. "I'm supposed to get the story on that river flood if it should hit town — but I'll bet there's a story in Fuddsy's yard too! Now, if only I could get in there," he went on, "I'd have two stories instead of just one."

Suddenly his eyes brightened, and he began to burrow under Elmer's fence. Soon he was peeping amiably around the yard. When Elmer caught sight of Bugs, he dropped the shovel he was using and began jumping up and down in rage. "It's you — you wetched wabbit!" he shrieked. "Didn't you see the sign in fwont of my house?"

"Say, whatcha diggin' for, Doc?" Bugs asked, ignoring Elmer's threatening glare.

"It's a secwet," Elmer replied. "It's a Viking ship — and when I dig it up, I'm going to sail it awound on exhibition!"

"Just a minute, Doc," Bugs said, whipping out a pad and pencil. "How do you spell 'Viking'?"

Elmer glanced scornfully at Bugs. "V-I-K—" he began and then snatched the paper from Bugs's paw. "I told you it was a secwet, you dwatted wabbit!"

"Too late for that now, Fuddsy, old pal," Bugs called out, hopping in the hole he had just burrowed into the garden.

Elmer was too quick for him, however, and pulled him out by the tail. "Oh no, you don't!" he cried, rolling a large stone over the hole. "I will guard you with my twusty shotgun — and while I do, you will finish digging up the ship."

"Boy!" exclaimed Bugs as he picked up a shovel. "When the chief told me to dig up some news, I never guessed he really meant it!" He cocked an inquiring eyebrow at Elmer. "How long do you figure this will take, Doc?"

"Oh, two or thwee days," Elmer said.

"Oh no!" Bugs cried. "You can't — "

"Dig!" shouted Elmer with a threatening wave of his shotgun.

"But you don't understand! A — "

"I SAID DIG!" Elmer bellowed.

At the end of the first day, a weak and panting Bugs was leaning against the side of the completely excavated ship.

"Well," smiled Elmer, "I never thought a dwatted wabbit could work so hard!"

"I had to, Doc," Bugs answered, leaping into the ship. "There could be a flood any time now. The river's rising. I tried to warn you!"

"A flood!" cried Elmer in dismay. "Oh, my pwecious ship! What will I do?"

"Jump in, that's what!" Bugs replied.

"And we'll see how much I remember from my old navy days. Man the foc'sle, Doc! Batten down the prow! And here we go!" he cried as a great rush of water floated the ship out of the garden . . .

As Bugs secured the ship outside the offices of the Daily Blast, Elmer patted him on the shoulder. "I'm vewy gwateful, Bugs," he admitted. "But why are you secuwing my ship with a padlock?"

"I just don't want it to get away, Doc," Bugs shouted as he raced into the newspaper office. "When this scoop comes off the presses, your ship will be just the thing to deliver the papers in!"
